Do FT have to validate their certificate?

Are there criteria for trainers?

Finally

- Most countries have only one association
- Prevalent target goals are to promote identity and training, networking FT and organize conferences
- Half of the associations have an ethical committee
- Only five countries have a law for psychotherapy, and there social welfare and insurances help for FT
- There is a variety of training standards among the countries: some of them have a legal and a very regulated norms, some others have no regulations
- Providers of training are mostly private institutes

Finally II

- Personal therapy is required in many countries
- Legal system is who sets TP only in Finland, Sweden and Austria. Associations are usually playing that role
- Most of the countries have more than 500 hours minimum standards
- There is not continuous development criteria in most of the countries. Family therapist don't have to validate their certificate after some years
- Almost all the countries have criteria for trainers and supervisors
- We want to appreciate the collaboration and encourage those associations who haven't still sent the questionnaire
